Approximately 1,000 trees were planted on campus March 3 in an effort to rehabilitate the Second Creek corridor.

UT Facilities Services worked with more than seventy volunteers to plant the saplings along the creek’s bank. The event marked Tennessee Arbor Day, held on the first Friday of March.

Four Facilities Services subunits, Landscape Services Arboriculture, Stormwater Management, the Office of Sustainability, and UT Recycling, organized the planting as part of a larger campus project.

“It has been my dream to rehabilitate this stream corridor since I came to UT three years ago,” said Stormwater Coordinator Garrett Ferry. “This is a great addition to the existing capital project in the area.”

The capital project includes the clearing of all plant material within the first fifteen feet of the Estabrook Road sidewalk. The planting project, which was made possible by three separate grants, goes a step further by clearing all invasive species from the bank in that area.

Project funding included grants of $500 and $800 from TWRA and a $20,000 grant from the Tennessee Wildlife Resource Agency approved through the Student Environmental Initiatives fee, also known as the Green Fee.

“This is a great example of the student Green Fee implementing better projects on campus,” said Sustainability Manager Preston Jacobsen.

TREES CONTINUED:

This addition to the project helped to clear all of the invasive species from the full clearing zone all the way to the stream, which allowed crews and volunteers to come back and plant the native trees.

“Invasive species are typically poorly suited to stabilize riparian zones due to shallow root systems,” Ferry said. “Native species actually have a much more robust root system that can grab on and stabilize the banks much more efficiently.”

From a water quality standpoint, these trees will also prevent erosion and will soak up water to prevent swelling of the creek’s volume.

“Any time you are slowing that water down you are improving water quality,” said Ferry.

In addition to improving water quality, the trees will increase the amount of canopy cover for the campus.

“The more we plant, the better we are going to be as far as energy conservation with the shading of hard surfaces and buildings,” said arborist Sam Adams. “In addition, we are storing carbon, absorbing carbon dioxide, and releasing oxygen—all the positive benefits that you can get from having additional trees.”

As Summer Heats Up, So Do UT Campus Road Closures

With good weather and fewer people on campus, summer provides the perfect time for UT to tackle campus road projects, and this year is no exception.

Almost half of Volunteer Boulevard, which runs through the heart of the campus, will be impacted this summer. Starting in June, the second phase of the Volunteer Boulevard streetscape project begins with the section west of Circle Park reduced to one lane in each direction and a complete closure of the road from Lake Loudoun Boulevard to Peyton Manning Pass. Circle Park Drive also will close in June, with temporary parking available in the C8 commuter student lot next to the McClung Museum.

Volunteer Boulevard from Peyton Manning Pass north to Hodges Library will be reduced to one lane each way as part of the streetscape project and for utility work.

A section of Lower Drive on the Hill between Middle Drive and Estabrook Road will be completely closed from Monday, May 15, to Monday, July 31.

Phillip Fulmer Way from Cumberland Avenue to Middle Drive will close periodically during the summer for pavement work as part of construction of phase 2 of the Student Union.

One project due to wrap up this summer is the City of Knoxville’s Cumberland Avenue streetscape project. Work should be completed in August.

Shorter closures for utility work include Andy Holt Avenue in front of the Allan Jones Aquatic Center (May 15–18) and Melrose Avenue in front of Tyson Alumni House (May 15–22).
